The Theology Building

The recent announcement by the President of Boston University that the next building to be constructed on the Charles River campus will house the School of Theology is news that should arouse whole-hearted enthusiasm from all alumni.

The importance of the School of Theology as an integral part of Boston University increases with each passing year. In these days when the pessimist sees the world in a state of moral chaos and even the optimist is sobered by the war-sown seeds of degeneration there is no greater nor more pressing need than for trained religious leaders who possess knowledge, courage, and simple faith in the ultimate goodness of man. This simple truth is one with which every man can agree no matter what his religious affiliation.

Boston University School of Theology has been serving the nation in this important work for many decades now, and the wide respect accorded Theology graduates everywhere is itself a tribute to the School’s success. Perhaps, more than any other department, the School of Theology, the oldest unit in the University, has best symbolized our aim as worded in the University charter and on the new coat of arms — learning, virtue, and piety.

It has been, however, a source of continual amazement to many religious educators throughout the country that Boston University could produce men of the caliber of our Theology graduates when operating under such trying physical conditions. Now through the generous offer of the Crusade for Christ movement of the Methodist Church, the possibility of the erection of a new Theology building on the campus has become a reality provided that Boston University alumni match this generosity with their own.

One third of a million dollars has been offered by the Crusade for Christ movement if Boston University alumni can produce the remaining two thirds. This challenge should be accepted not only by Theology graduates but by all Boston University alumni who see the importance of religious leadership in the years to come.

Boston University, since its founding, has been a melting pot for students of all races, religions, and political leanings. Through this variety of association students become imbued with the virtues of tolerance, flexibility, and understanding — qualities vitally necessary to good American citizenship. With this liberal background as part of their college training alumni of Boston University should be quick to evaluate the need for tolerant and wise religious leaders no matter what tenets they uphold.

The erection of the School of Theology building is one project which should receive whole-hearted support from the alumni body. There is a great need, and there is a way to fulfill it. That way lies with you.

Warren S. Freeman
A N architect’s drawing of a section of the new School of Theology building which, with alumni support and the substantial gift of the Crusade for Christ movement, will be the next building to be erected on the Charles River campus is shown on this month’s cover of BOSTONIA. (For a complete plan of the exterior of the Theology building turn to page 7).

With the erection of each new building on the University campus Boston University progresses in many areas. Our new buildings make possible the accommodation of large numbers of students while providing adequate working facilities for study and research for all. While greatly improving the physical comfort of our departments the development of the campus has also enhanced the prestige of the University within the community and the nation.

Academically Boston University has had a good measure of acclaim in the educational world, but until recent years its physical plant has in no way measured up to the standing of its faculty or curriculum. The spirit with which Boston University has carried on in spite of innumerable handicaps has been truly admirable, but at best it was making the most of a bad situation.

Boston University alumni are now seeing the day when they no longer find it necessary to apologize for the shabbiness and inadequacy of their University buildings. Our new campus is now a Boston landmark, its Gothic architecture adding beauty and distinction to its Charles River surroundings. Citizens of Boston and surrounding towns are taking an almost personal interest in each new addition, for they feel that a beautiful campus for Boston University is a contribution to the city itself and in its progress they take great civic pride.

Alumni are urged to revisit their Alma Mater and see for themselves what is being accomplished. They most assuredly will not be disappointed.

DEAN WALTER G. MUELLER

THE PHYSICAL NEED

When the theologian comes to Boston University, his first impression is of the dormitory halls and his room. For many men this experience precipitates a minor crisis and an impulse to pack up and go home. Scores of men have said to the Dean that only the absence of the price of a return ticket kept them through the first day and night. Yet, after only a brief orientation period in Boston and a few weeks of fellowship, the drab walls became familiar and the unattractive becomes modified by feelings of home.

In Warren Hall space at one time was found for eighty men, but that was partly in defiance of housing regulations. Since the new fire regulations have become operative, a goodly proportion of room space has been condemned. Accommodations at “72” have shrunk to fifty-one beds. Similar problems present themselves in the other dormitories. A careful study indicates that the new building should include provision for at least one hundred fifty beds for single men and others staying at the school during the week. In addition, there is desperate need for a married students’ dormitory. The site for such an apartment house has already been generously offered by the University.

After the theologian has had his initial shock of discovering where he is to room, he asks, “Where do we eat?” He is now treated to his second jolt, for Boston University School of Theology is almost unique among seminaries in never having had a refectory. There are three sad consequences to this situation. First, the student finds it extremely difficult to get good food at modest prices; although many try to solve this problem by working in restaurants, a host of men do not eat as well as they should. Secondly, equally serious is the limitation on the development of fellowship which the lack of a refectory entails; the “Boston spirit” emerges despite the severe handicap of the absence of common meals. Thirdly, then too, the School has continually been embarrassed when asked to be host to conferences, both professional and inter-seminary. An adequate refectory will make the seminary a happier community and a friendlier host to its neighbors.

Along with the need for a refectory goes that of an adequate social room, usable for innumerable types of occasions. A small dining room, a kitchenette, a small lounge for women staff members, a faculty lounge, and attractive guest rooms are among the other social needs of the School.

The next question in the theologian’s mind is, “Where do we study?” The history of the library is too complex to be retold here, but it has literally overflowed its physical bounds. The amount of research accomplished under the present library accommodations seems miraculous. With the largest part of the second floor given over to it, the library is nevertheless only partly usable, since innumerable books and journals must be stacked in inaccessible rooms. No way exists at present of making the best use of special collections and important research materials. When it comes to library, the needs are literally Lebensraum and the physical facilities to use the study materials.

Library study is only one phase of learning. The classrooms, seminar rooms, together with space for work-shops and practicums must next be considered. In the new building we should have three large classrooms, two smaller classrooms, six seminar rooms and conference rooms. The classroom construction must keep in mind audio-visual aids, the needs of Church music offerings, the Seminary Singers, large lecture classes and small discussion groups. Departmental demands can be met by well-furnished permanently planned seminar rooms designed for specialized research and consultations.

There must be ample opportunity for students to find their professors. A theological school is a graduate school. On this academic level of work not only is the seminar process indispensable, but also the consultation hour with the adviser or major professor. Both students and faculty members have been handicapped in the past because of poorly arranged and limited office space assigned to the professors. In the new building this handicap can be overcome.

The administration also has its physical needs. With widely separated quarters for the dean, the registrar, the placement officer, and the field work director it has been difficult to coordinate records and to correlate business efficiently. Now that the School of Theology is pioneering in her orientation and testing Program, in her field work reorganization, and in her counseling activities, the need for good administrative accommodations is especially emphatic. We look forward to physical facilities through which to serve the University better and by means of which we may more hospitably and effectively serve representatives of Church boards and agencies, Conference officials and visitors when they come to interview students.

Robinson Chapel has been the pride and joy of the School of Theology. In worship the life of the seminary comes to its highest unity. A beautiful chapel inspiring the whole campus community and inviting all to meditation, prayer and worship is a fundamental requirement. On the Charles River campus a new chapel should be erected on the central plaza. Robinson Chapel is somewhat small for the present size of the School and the new chapel should therefore be large enough to accommodate at least a hundred more persons. Many of the appealing elements of the present chapel will enter into the new one. Modern ventilating devices will replace the antiquated and ineffective present apparatus.

In addition to the regular chapel for daily use by the whole School and for the class work in homiletics and worship, the seminary needs a small prayer chapel, an “upper room,” in the main building, easily accessible to the dormitory men and available to all others. The vitality of personal devotion is strengthened by the small fellowship group. Such a group needs not a large sanctuary but an intimate “upper room” for spiritual nurture.

FINANCING THE PROJECT

The Crusade Challenge Campaign is the drive led by Dr. William H. Stewart, newly appointed Professor of Practical Theology, to meet these building needs. An academic institution which can meet all these needs is physically complex and financially costly, but Dr. Stewart has made an inspiring start in his work. Student and faculty enthusiasm runs high and the alumni response is heartening. An alumnus of the class of 1924, he is a man of fine gifts. His leadership has been recognized by the Church in significant appointments and in the five-year assignment as District Superintendent of the Brooklyn South District of the New York East Conference of the Methodist Church. Just prior to coming to the staff of the School of Theology he was minister of the St. Mark’s Church, Rockville Center, Long Island.

Meeting the pressing requirements of a new building as outlined above necessitates, as we have said, a great outlay of money—much more, indeed, than was envisioned several years ago when plans for a new structure were first made. In these days of soaring building costs a greater campaign, therefore, must be undertaken than simply meeting the conditions of the Crusade for Christ gift, whereby the University is to raise $666,666 to qualify for the Crusade grant of $333,333.33. A total of a million dollars will carry us a good way on the road; but the entire project, including the main six-story building, chapel, and married students’ dormitory requires over twice that amount.

The main building will cost about $1,300,000, the chapel about $500,000, and the married students’ dormitory about $400,000. Though the need is acute, the latter unit will not be part of the present Crusade. It is hoped that some one or some group will wish to provide that building in the near future. The University has already provided the site. The combined costs of the other buildings mean an outlay of $1,800,000. With $333,333.33 in sight from the Crusade for Christ and about $400,000 in view from other resources, the present drive calls for about $1,100,000 additional to be raised. In other words we have a possible $733,333.33 to be applied against a new building and chapel costing $1,800,000.

Because of the size of the project, it is being developed in two phases. The first phase terminates on January 1st by which time $666,666.66 must be raised in order to qualify for $333,333.33 from the Crusade for Christ. The next phase, if necessary, continues the Crusade Challenge Campaign to procure the balance of the money.

Doctor Stewart has inaugurated a magnificent crusade. There will be sectional meetings all over the United States among alumni and other churchmen. A comprehensive program among annual conference sessions is being mapped out. The director and faculty members will make personal presentations at many of these sessions. In many cities the alumni are taking the initiative in organizing meetings to boost the School and bring its claims before their people. The General Boston University Alumni Office under the leadership of Professor Warren Free man is working hand in hand with Doctor Stewart, for Boston University School of Theology is an all-university enterprise.

Other phases of the crusade are also significant. Dr. Harry W. McPherson of the Board of Education of the Methodist Church, an alumnus of the class of 1909, has initiated a One Thousand Dollar Club. This is composed of alumni who agree to give or get $1000 each by January 1, 1948. Members of this donor’s club already include President Daniel L. Marsh, Bishop Lewis O. Hartman, Dr. William H. Stewart, Dean Walter G. Muelder, Dr. William R. Leslie, Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, Dr. Charles S. Kendall, Reverend George T. Carl, Reverend Russell Humbert, Professor Richard M. Cameron, Bishop Bruce Baxter, and other names are coming in daily. Doctor Stewart hopes to announce in the near future the names of over a hundred alumni who are supporting this phase of the campaign as one part of their assistance.

No sooner was the campaign announced than an outstanding Jewish Rabbi sent in a substantial contribution as an expression of appreciation of Boston University School of Theology. By the time this issue of BOSTONIA reaches its readers, Doctor Stewart will have completed his coordination of the efforts and giving of students and faculty. They are unanimous in their commitment to the program, loyal and devoted in their support.

One of the finest kinds of interest in the campaign is that of individual churches. The St. Mark’s Church of Rockville Centre, Long Island, has set the pace as the first church officially to contribute $1000. Since then several others have accepted that challenge. In making

The Radio Workshop

EDWIN H. GINN
Assistant in radio, Boston University, Bureau of Publicity

More evidence of Boston University's growing leadership in radio was recognized a few weeks ago when the announcement was made that the University, in cooperation with the New England Committee on Radio in Education, will offer an intensive radio workshop this summer for selected professional educators from the six New England states.

Purpose of the workshop is to train teachers, superintendents, supervisors, school superintendents, and other individuals with special interests in education by radio, in the latest techniques of successful radio production and to acquaint them with modern trends in radio education. Specifically, students in the workshop should be now engaged in education by radio, or those intending to go into this long neglected field. Through such workshops, educational broadcasts can be raised to a high professional level, and made interesting to the public educators are striving to reach.

A joint announcement was made in March by President Daniel I. Marsh and Mr. E. Everett Clark, chairman of the New England Committee on Radio in Education, that Dr. Everett L. Austin of the Rhode Island State Department of Education had been selected as director of the summer workshop which will run for three weeks, July 7 to 25. After several conferences with Boston University authorities, members of the New England Committee, and representatives from WBZ-WBZA and the New England Regional Network, WEEI and the Columbia Broadcasting System, WCOP and the American Broadcasting System, WNAC and the Yankee-Mutual Network (cooperating stations in the new venture), Dr. Austin made public the faculty which includes the nation's outstanding radio people identified with educational broadcasting.

Listed among the prominent radio people to lecture in the workshop are Walter Hackett, playwright and script writer for CBS' School of The Air; Sterling Fisher, director of NBC's University of The Air; Ruth Weir Miller, radio assistant in the Philadelphia public schools, and Dwight B. Herrick, manager of the public service department of NBC.

The six areas of instruction to be covered in the intensive three-week course are: Program Production; Script Writing; Transcriptions, Recordings, and Equipment; Use of Radio as an Educational Tool; The Library in Radio in Education, and Administration. Each enrollee will be assigned to his first or second choice of areas of work and will be a member of a subgroup of about twenty persons. Each of these subgroups will have a moderator, a subject matter specialist, and a recorder. Actual radio programs, produced by the combined efforts of the sub-groups will be presented and recorded. Recordings will be played before the groups for analysis and criticism, and each sub-group will present a final written report of its activities and conclusions which will be incorporated into an over-all report of the workshop to be furnished all students at the close of the session.

Seminar and Laboratory techniques will be used, and morning sessions of subgroups will be held in the broadcasting studios of the participating stations. Afternoon classes (general sessions) will be in Boston University classrooms. Dr. Austin has defined the workshop as a cooperative laboratory for intensive study of radio in education, "an opportunity for educators to participate in all phases of evaluation, production and utilization of radio education programs, and as a stimulus to further study and wider use of radio in educational programs." No effort has been spared to make the workshop as ideal as possible, for it is intended as a pattern for future workshops on a local, state, regional, or national basis. Care has been taken that attention will be given radio problems in non-urban as well as metropolitan areas. The workshop will be practical, but at the same time of a high academic standard. Four semester hours of credit granted upon the successful completion of the course by the Boston University School of Education will be acceptable toward undergraduate or graduate degrees and will be transferable to other institutions.

Boston University can be proud of its part in organizing the first workshop in radio ever conducted in the United States. Through this effort, the University can take its place with institutions like Ohio State, Northwestern, University of Chicago, University of Denver, and Columbia, in recognizing radio as a great medium for mass education, and in realistically undertaking the task of training people for responsible work in this field.

Local radio men who have accepted teaching assignments in the summer workshop are Richard A. Cobb, production supervisor, WNAC and the Yankee network; Henry W. Lundquist, assistant program director, WCOP, both instructors in radio at the College of Business Administration, and George W. Slade, formerly at CBA, and now assistant director of the Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council. Ronald V. Cochran, news director of WCOP, Yvome Berge, WNAC and the Yankee network, and Paul W. Keyes, writer-producer of WNAC, are other Boston people lecturing.

BOSTONIA
The higher the quality of a university's faculty the greater is its need for library service designed especially to support its teaching and research programs. Our library service problem will increase as we move to the new campus, for the very fine non-university-supported libraries, such as the Boston Public Library, which we have relied upon for part of our library responsibilities in the past will be less accessible to our faculty and students.

Boston University is grateful for the aid given by these institutions in developing the very fine reputation which it now holds in the education world. Our relationship with these libraries in the future however, should be mainly for seldom-used materials which it will be impractical for us to acquire.

Our use of these collections for research work will be most welcome, for these organizations realize that it would be absurd for any other library in this area to try to duplicate their collections, some of which it would be practically impossible to acquire at this late date. However, we will now find it necessary to organize our own collections of more frequently used materials as distances make it much more difficult to use the former supplementary collections.

Boston University can benefit greatly from a program to increase the facilities of our libraries to meet our own needs more adequately. The library staff, the organization of the books and other materials, as well as the collection itself, can and should be designed to give valuable assistance to the faculty in its teaching and research work. We have the advantage too, at this time, of profiting from the trials and errors of others who have evolved some very good examples which we might adapt to our own particular purposes.

As a background for Boston University's library problems let us examine briefly the more general American library picture that we may better be able to see the relationship between it and Boston University's libraries.

The Beginnings

The idea of the American library is, perhaps, as typically American as the hot-dog. One must understand the American way of life to understand our libraries. The belief in the individual and his right to advance as far and as fast as his ability and his effort would take him formed the basis for this library movement. The gulf that has always existed between the cultural institutions of the several classes of people in Europe is practically unheard of in the United States.

Our public libraries got their start from a popular demand for reading materials, although, as we shall see later, popular demand had much less to do with their later growth than librarians often like to admit. A group of ambitious young men in Philadelphia in 1731, to provide themselves with books which they felt they should read for business, general educational and recreational purposes, subscribed to an idea originated by one of their members, Benjamin Franklin. Each was to pay a small fee or subscription toward the support of a library for the group. To them it was good business —no one of them could afford to own but a few titles, but by group action each could take advantage of the whole collection.

That this might be a new idea and develop into a historical fact was a minor point with them. It served the purpose and so it prospered. This organization which later became the Philadelphia Library Club exemplifies the typical American spirit. Here was a social group with rather meager resources but with the desire to improve their respective economic and social positions. It was the beginning of a movement to provide the masses with the means for self education.

The subscription-type libraries, as they were called, and other privately supported libraries soon increased to create an influence quite out of proportion to their numbers. The originator claimed the results for his library idea to be: improved conversation, elevation of the common tradesman and farmer to a par with that of foreign gentlemen, and may have contributed in some degree to the general stand in defense of the colonist's liberties. These shrewd Yankees were paying for these books and they most certainly were getting their financial return by using them, which accounts in part, at least, for the great influence which these early libraries had on the colonies and later on the young nation.

Up to this point the libraries mentioned have been very small and informal. This type is the easiest and the most inviting to use, but, unfortunately, the scope of printed materials makes such collections very inadequate for ordinary use. Librarians, however, are placing more and more emphasis upon the good characteristics of very small collections in the organization of larger libraries.

The Period of Growth

After about a century of development of the various privately financed libraries, public opinion forced the beginning of legislation designed to make library service more generally available by means of public support. Peterborough, N. H., gets credit for sponsoring the first public library in 1833. New York, in 1835, passed a law establishing publicly supported school district libraries which were to serve teachers, pupils and the public.

In 1849 Massachusetts and New Hampshire passed laws permitting the founding of public libraries, and in 1852 plans for the Boston Public Library were started. Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and Michigan soon followed New York’s lead with school district laws, but this exploratory and rather hastily prepared legislation was doomed to failure. By 1890 what remained of these school district libraries became school libraries in name as well as in fact.

The rapid industrialization of this area during the last half of the nineteenth century and the resulting social problems were important factors in the almost phenomenal growth of public libraries during this period. The impetus for this expansion, however, shifted from the desire of library users for more collections to the desires of public spirited individuals who thought the public should have libraries which might keep people out of some of the mischief of those days by diverting their attention to the library. While this procedure undoubtedly speeded the growth of these institutions, it did tend to reduce the popular interest in them.

The increased size of the individual libraries caused by their natural growth increased the formality of these institutions and made them more difficult for the people to use. Librarians seemed to add to the general confusion by putting too much emphasis upon the library as an end in itself rather than concentrating upon service to their users. Competition from various sources for the leisure time of the people coupled with the changing conditions within the library reduced the influence of libraries considerably from what it might have been.

Regardless of these factors, however, the figures given for the development during this period reveal that by 1863 we had one thousand publicly supported libraries. By 1875 there were two thousand urban libraries with one thousand or more books and by 1900 there were nine thousand free circulating libraries of three hundred or more volumes in this country.

Those individuals with the incentive to use these libraries found that they filled quite definite humanitarian, vocational and educational needs in the community. Some interesting testimonials in the biographies of some of the more prominent alumni of these “people’s universities” give an indication of the part they played in the lives of some of the people. The outstanding example is that of the immigrant boy, Andrew Carnegie, who was so impressed by the value of the information and ideas which he obtained from libraries, that he gave a large part of a huge fortune to the increase and improvement of libraries. The thousands of others who have contributed various sized gifts to our libraries have also helped to make library history.

The American Library System

The world has never seen such an instrument for universal education as the system of American libraries. While this system is not complete, nor are even the completed units properly supported in most instances, yet it is the envy of those who would encourage popular education in the other parts of the world. For convenience we may divide our libraries into two groups, those who serve our formal education institutions from kindergartens through university, which we might group under the heading school libraries, and those not affiliated with formal educational institutions or non-school libraries.

In general, these two groups stock the same materials. However, the organization and service vary greatly between the two groups. The school libraries are designed to meet the needs of the parent institution while the non-school libraries are planned to meet the more general educational needs of the public. For example, suppose a student leaves school before graduation as so many do. Up to this time the library at his school, if there is one, has furnished most, if not all of his library service as an adjunct to his educational program. No matter at what stage of his education he left school, he should be able to go to a non-school library, if and when he desires to, and continue his general education through library staff assistance and the use of library materials.

Through such services as the readers’ adviser, many public libraries are specializing in providing reading programs designed to meet the needs of just such readers. Closer cooperation between our two great educational agencies, schools and libraries, would increase the efficiency of each as well as the total educational program of the United States. If we could rid our various educational services of their isolationism and emphasize the need for continuing education from birth to senility, we could have a much better informed populace.

But let us examine briefly the institutions which make up our system of libraries. Only the non-school type will be discussed here, leaving the more detailed presentation of school libraries as they relate to Boston University to a later paper in this series.

As the dispenser of the broadest and most complete service to the nation and one of the most important world libraries, we should start with the Library of Congress, which was organized as the name implies to serve our Congress. It aims to be able to give any Congressman any information he might desire in as short a time as possible. In order to do this the collection must be one of the greatest in the world. The staff must contain subject specialists who are experts on every subject upon which Congress might desire information which means that the Library must be prepared to answer any possible question.

With such an organization and collection available it is only common sense to make its facilities available to the nation and in many cases even to the world so long as it does not interfere with the original purpose of the library. Interlibrary loan service, reproduction of materials that may not be taken from the Library, as well as many bibliographical and other services offered to our libraries, makes the Library of Congress, in effect, our national library. One authority writes that it is “in short, a working, living, serving organism in aid of research scholarship, legislation, government, the national life itself.”

With this service to supplement it, if it cannot borrow from some source closer at hand, any public library in the country may furnish its readers with the materials they desire for most library purposes. Demands for service to special groups

Scholarships for Valor

Americans with traditional generosity have endeavored in many ways to express their gratitude for the sacrifices made by American men in the recent war. For those veterans who returned to civilian life seeking to rebuild their lives into a workable pattern there have been made available the G.I. bill for education, disability compensations, pension plans, and on-the-job-training, to name but a few.

Often, however, the men who paid the supreme sacrifice do not fare as well. Too easily it is forgotten that many of these brave men left behind wives, sons, and daughters whose lives will never be the same because of the loss they have suffered.

The trustees of Boston University foresaw this possibility early in the war and set about to make remedy. By action of the Board of Trustees of the University scholarships for the children of graduates who were killed in service in World War II were set up to be used whenever the children should become of age to enter college. The first such valor scholarship as they were to be named was awarded in 1943 to one-year-old Ann Landess, daughter of the late Captain Robert Henderson Landess, CBAA'37, '38, and Helen Reilly Landess, PAL'36.

Although little Ann was the first to receive a valor scholarship, the first scholarship recipient to be enrolled at Boston University is Miss Mary Fox, daughter of the Reverend George L. Fox, Thd'34, the heroic chaplain whose death on board the S. S. Dorchester made one of the epic stories of the recent war. Mary is enrolled at the College of Music where she is majoring in church music. Religion has always been close to Mary's family, for in addition to her chaplain father, her mother is a licensed minister and active preacher, her late aunt, Freda Hurlbut Bonney, was one of the foremost women evangelists in the country, and her grandfather was a minister.

Mary, however, claims that it was not her family who influenced her to become interested in church music and evangelism.

"It is just that I love that kind of music even more than classical or any other type. It is wonderful to have this scholarship and attend the University from which my father graduated. I always wanted to enroll at Boston University and this scholarship has given me the opportunity. Still," the young girl will add soberly, "I would rather have my father here to be able to send me to college." Although any young girl would deeply miss her father if he were taken away while still a young and vigorous man, Mary has perhaps a little more reason to grieve over the loss of her dad, for Mary Fox's father was that rare person who is both a spiritual and a physical hero. Although his life was exemplary, it is the story of his death which will live on in the annals of American heroes.

On a cold, black night in February, 1943, the American transport, S. S. Dorchester was proceeding cautiously along its chartered course in the icy waters of the North Atlantic. At the height of the German submarine menace every Allied captain anxiously made his way across this great expanse of ocean where the German U-boats stalked their prey. Suddenly the silence was rent by a mighty explosion as a German torpedo tore into the side of the huge American troopship. As the ship began to sink, the men aboard rushed about in terrified confusion seeking life boats and preservers while there was still time. It was then that four men, whose story was later to become one of the most heroic tales of self-sacrifice to come out of the war, took over. These men were the Army chaplains aboard. Their names were Rabbi Alex Goode, Father John Washington, the Reverend Clark V. Poling, and the Reverend George Fox, a graduate of the School of Theology of Boston University.

With words of courage and hope they mingled with the men, aiding them into the lifeboats, helping them to don their life preservers. When the lifebelts ran out, unhesitatingly they removed their own and handed them out to the men. As the crippled ship settled into the black waters of the Atlantic, these four men of God were seen kneeling in prayer on its slanting deck preparing themselves for the last time to meet their Maker.

A hero's death for George Fox did not surprise those who had known him both as a private first class in World War I and as a minister in a small town in Ver-
President Marsh has announced the appointment of Mrs. Warwick B. Hobart to head one of the new administrative offices being established under the general supervision of Dean Kenneth L. Heaton, who joined the staff of the University in January. Mrs. Hobart will have the immediate direction of the central Office of Admissions.

The proposed program of admissions seeks to consolidate the work formerly administered separately by each undergraduate school and college in the University. Under the new organization, each college will still continue to determine its own standards for the selection of students, but the admission of these students will be concentrated in one central place. The new Office will not only serve the needs of prospective students more adequately but will also add greatly to the administrative efficiency of the respective colleges. The new Office will be completely functioning by fall and will be housed in the new campus development. The permanent address will be 701 Commonwealth Avenue.

Mrs. Hobart brings to Boston University a wide experience in personnel management in both education and industry. She comes directly from the War Department, where she served as Chief of Placement of the Civic Personnel Division, Office of the Secretary of War. In this capacity, she and her staff were responsible for the development of plans, policies, and procedures for the selection and recruitment of the entire civilian component of the War Department.

Earlier in the war, she was responsible in the same Office for the intensive program for the employment of women to replace men for military service. This activity led to the employment of the largest female civilian force under any one employer in the world. Mrs. Hobart received meritorious award from the Secretary of War in recognition of this particular service.

Academy Award Winner

At a recent Academy Award Dinner in Hollywood, California, Harold Russell, C.B.A. veteran student, received two awards for his performance in the motion picture, "The Best Years of Our Lives." One award was for the "best supporting actor" of the year and the other was a special Oscar to which no specific title was given. After a tour of veteran hospitals and Red Cross rallies throughout this country, Harold, who is on a special leave from his studies, will visit England for the opening of the film there and for a series of tours of English hospitals.

BOSTONIA
School of Nursing Opens

The formal dedication of the recently-established School of Nursing was held on Wednesday, April 30, at which time the new home of the School at 160 Beacon Street in Boston was opened for the first time to the public.

An assembly of faculty, students, alumni and guests gathered in Robinson Chapel at 2 p.m. for opening services. Main speaker on the program was President Daniel L. Marsh who chose for his subject, "Boston University, Past, Present and Future." Dean Martha Ruth Smith of the School of Nursing spoke on "The School of Nursing: Blueprint of the Future." The invocation was given by Dean Emeritus Jesse B. Davis, and the prayer was read by Dean Walter G. Mueller of the School of Theology.

Following the assembly a tea was held under the sponsorship of the student body at the new School building attended by President and Mrs. Marsh, Dean Smith, Mr. Augustus P. Loring, trustee, and many other members of the administration and faculty. The graduating class presented a gift of a mirror to the School as part of the afternoon program. Miss Helen Aikens, chairman of the Gift Committee, made the presentation.

Highlight of the evening program was the banquet sponsored by the Nurses’ Club at the Hotel Sheraton. The banquet was attended by alumni, students, faculty members, friends of nursing, administrators, and co-workers. Guests at the banquet were Miss Annie W. Goodrich, the outstanding woman leader of nursing education in the United States, and Miss Catherine Coyne, correspondent for the Boston Herald.

Miss Goodrich, now 81 years, was voted one of the twelve outstanding women of the last 50 years by the New York Career Tours for Women in 1939. Dean Emeritus of the Yale School of Nursing, she was first president of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Nursing. During World War I she was Dean of the Army School of Nursing for which she was awarded the Distinguished Service medal. In 1936 she was awarded an honorary degree of Doctor of Law and Letters by Russell Sage.

Miss Catherine Coyne, a College of Business Administration graduate and now considered one of the outstanding women journalists in the country, has been cited for her fine work as a war correspondent for the Boston Herald. Since the close of the war her informed articles on many phases of post-war living have received wide and favorable comment.

The new School of Nursing was first established in its home on Beacon Street, formerly the residence of Mrs. Grant Walker, wealthy socialite, in November of last year when it was moved from the School of Education building at 84 Exeter Street. The task of supervising this extensive moving job went to Miss Eleanor Page Bowen, Associate Professor of Nursing Education, who acted as Dean of the School during Miss Smith’s recent absence. Dean Smith was unable to take up her new duties for several months due to an almost fatal automobile accident. At the time of her appointment as Dean last June, Miss Smith was the first woman in the history of Boston University to be appointed to an academic deanship.

At the present time the School of Nursing has an enrollment of 430 students. Of this number there are 173 full-time students of which 124 are veterans; part-time enrollment, however, consists mainly of non-veterans — in number, 217 — and 40 veterans.

A Country Doctor

Recently the name of a Boston University graduate appeared in headlines and editorials in newspapers from Maine to California. The Boston University man who achieved such national fame was Dr. Edward R. Janjigian, School of Medicine, Class of 1936.

Because Doctor Janjigian had decided to turn down a lucrative medical position in the East and “bury” himself in a small mid-western town as a country doctor he was news. Although Doctor Janjigian states that he fails to see “why there is all this rumpus about an insignificant country doctor,” the story of how he came to make this decision is the story of a doctor who is living up to the highest ideals of his profession.

Edward Janjigian lived in New York in his early years. After the death of his parents, when he was still a young boy, he went to live with his brother, Dr. Robert R. Janjigian, a graduate of Boston University School of Medicine, Class of 1918, and his sister-in-law. He received his early educational training at Wyoming Seminary and later attended Dartmouth College, the University of Chicago, where he received his doctorate, and finally the School of Medicine here at Boston University.

After his internship he was appointed to the staff of the Danville State Hospital in Danville, Pennsylvania; he remained there until 1940 when he was called to active service. For three years Doctor Janjigian was stationed at the Walter Reed General Hospital in Washington, D. C., finally becoming Assistant Chief of the Neuropsychiatrist Section. In December, 1943, he was transferred to the 71st Infantry Division as Division Neuropsychiatrist and served in France, Germany, and Austria with this division.

In December, 1945, the young doctor was discharged from the service after five years duty. His wife at this time had just learned that her father was dying from Leukemia. The Janjigians decided to move to Edinburg, Indiana, temporarily so that Mrs. Janjigian might be with her father in his last days. Their plans were to return with the children to Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, where the doctor’s family resided and where he had been offered the lucrative position of Chief Psychiatrist for the State of Pennsylvania in the regional office in Wilkes-Barre.

Edinburg, however, was suffering from a shortage of doctors. One other physician, an elderly man, was carrying the burden for the entire population. Young Doctor Janjigian decided to pitch in and... help as long as he was staying in Edinburg. During that time, in spite of the pressure of his medical duties, he found time to write a novel, DOCTOR DES-

TINY, the story of a schizophrenic doctor who, unable to cope with life, eventually destroys himself.

In a short time Mrs. Janjigian’s father passed on, and the time had come when the trip back East was at hand. The young doctor saw the need for medical aid in Edinburg, and yet he felt that he owed it to his three children, Jessie, 7, Hannah, 6, and Edward, Jr., 4, to accept the position in the East which offered more security for them all.

The family packed and prepared to leave. The doctor and his wife said good-bye to his former patients and friends in the little town and started off. Their journey was short, however, for on the way the young doctor got to thinking. He thought of the 2,500 persons in the little town who would now be dependent on one man alone to help them in their hour of need. He thought of his job waiting in the East, a splendid opportunity for any rising young psychiatrist.

It was a decisive moment in the doctor’s life, but in the brief time since he had left Edinburg he had found his answer. Unhesitatingly he turned the car around and started back. Doctor Janjigian had decided to remain a country doctor. The large American press associations soon learned of his return to Edinburg, and the story was sent in press releases all over the country. Doctor Janjigian had become a symbol of the young Ameriicans who could still put their desires to serve the community ahead of individual ambition.

Of his decision a Boston Globe editorial said:

"His impetuous return to practice in an Indiana town which he had just left for the security and regular salary of executive work in the East gave Dr. Edward R. Janjigian a place on many front pages. He loses none of the honor due his decision if it be remembered that many another young medical man, faced with the same problem, has also chosen a career in the country village . . . .

"The picture of country medicine is a sorry one. Too many towns are without doctors and slow to guarantee them a living. Too many areas are without hospitals.

"The burden for the moment is upon the doctors themselves; and it is encouraging to know that there is a Doctor Janjigian, and other young men like him, ready to shoulder it."

SPEECH AND HUMAN RELATIONS

By Joseph G. Brin, Director of the Department of Speech Counseling, Boston Uni-

$2.75.

Professor Brin, long an acknowledged authority in the field of speech education, has recently contributed another excellent book to his specialized area of instruction. The book is described as not being "a textbook of hard and fast rules but rather a simply written, practical guidebook for the man and woman who recognize correct speech as the badge of good breeding."

SPEECH AND HUMAN RELATIONS covers some of the more practical aspects of the science of verbal expression. The book is of value to all who have use for material in the speech field — for the speaker, the teacher, and also for the ordinary conversationalist. Of particular interest to this reviewer was the testing section of the book in which the reader is given an opportunity to test all of the principles covered in the text thereby learning to utilize the material in the best manner possible. This is one of the best uses of testing technique in the entire speech field.

We are happy to recommend this most recent book by Professor Brin to all who are interested in speech work.

A HISTORY OF THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART, Vol. II, by Winifred E. Howe, Boston University College of Liberal Arts, A.B., 1901. (Volume I of Miss Howe’s history was published by the Museum in 1913.)

To see America’s crowning exhibition of public utilities, go to New York City. That metropolis has no rival in applying what men know to what men want to do. Yet we should not forget that New Yorkers maintain not only their public utilities but also agencies that work steadily for what is higher than convenience. Of these good enterprises not the least is the Metropolitan Museum of Art, where the community collects, guards, and displays essential beauty, and even conducts classes in artistry, just for the public’s enjoyment and training.

For the second time in its history, Boston University will be host to the Dad Vail regatta, an association of the newer colleges and universities in rowing. Eight schools, from as far distant as Florida and Ohio, have signified they will be present for the event May 24, and two other schools are expected to accept. The regatta will be held along the Charles River campus of Boston University, the finish line to be near the Cottage Farm Bridge.

Members of the Association to be present are Rollins College of Florida, Marietta College, Ohio, Rutgers University, Dartmouth College, American International, Manhattan, Clark, and the host, Boston University. Iona College of New Rochelle, New York, and LeSalle College of Philadelphia have been invited, but as yet have not verified their entry. Marietta plans to fly their teams here for the event.

According to James Nesworthy, Boston University crew coach, three or four schools are expected to enter the freshman race which will begin at 3 p.m., Saturday, May 24, five or six teams are expected for the junior varsity event, and eight to ten teams will participate in the varsity race. The jayvee event will be rowed at 4 p.m. while the varsity competition will begin at 5.

The Dad Vail trophy was first offered in 1934 as a tribute to the late Harry Emerson Vail, beloved rowing coach at the University of Wisconsin. It was not until 1939, however, that the Association was formed. Two of the officers for the first committee are now at Boston University. They are Dr. John Harmon, Athletic Director, and James Nesworthy, then at American International College. The first race of this new association was at Red Bank, New Jersey, in May of 1939. Rutgers won the varsity event with Boston University second.

Library
such as children, young people, and the foreign born, have resulted in the formation of departments to specialize in this type of materials and service. Wide interest in certain subject fields have also brought special emphasis to such departments as music, science and technology, and business.

If more highly skilled service is desired than these departments can give, many large business houses, special organizations and industrial concerns have libraries equipped to give a very specialized service to their sponsors. These libraries often represent very narrow subject fields but with much more complete collections than the public library can afford or should be expected to have if supported only by public funds.

Close relationships between these libraries and the public library make it possible for the latter to call upon these special libraries and even the organization specialists for information supplementary to their more general collections. In return the special libraries rely upon the public library for the more general information. This type of cooperation is typical in the library world where competition is quite non-existent. There is a growing tendency for libraries to divide up the fields for purchase and service so as to give a maximum coverage of the fields of knowledge with the least amount of duplication possible in a given area. This includes college and university libraries as well.

Public libraries are also supplemented by privately endowed or otherwise supported libraries which are usually of the reference type — meaning that the books are for use only in the building. Many of these are open to the public although the use of some are still restricted quite closely to members only. In the latter case if one has good reason to use such materials, that is, if the materials are not available any other place in the area and the need is judged to be scholarly enough, he will ordinarily be admitted. The contribution of these libraries is considerable in that they release the public library from duplicating many of the materials covered by them which allows the public library to give more attention to the other subjects.

Well, we may have strayed a long way from Boston University, but in planning for our future we should be mindful of the constantly evolving picture of total education. With the present rate of increase in knowledge one has difficulty keeping up with the advancements in his own field. Yet it is imperative that we familiarize ourselves with new fields and the advancements in, at least, the related fields if we are to make the contribution expected of us as college graduates. To make this task more pleasant and efficient we need preparation throughout all our formal education years in why and how to put libraries to work for us.

Perhaps this background will help to bring into focus our ideas of the total library situation and allow us to view the position of this institution at Boston University with more objective purpose.
Leading educators from all over New England and other parts of the country participated in the annual spring Open House program and alumni luncheon held by the School of Education Alumni Association on Saturday, April 12. Dr. John J. Desmond, Jr., Commissioner of Education for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, delivered the keynote address on "Needs in Secondary Education" at the annual luncheon in Alumni Hall.

Classes held Saturday morning were open to the alumni with guest speakers conducting sessions in health problems, teaching in primary grades, and teaching study skills in reading. Two panel discussions on "Rehabilitation and Recreational Therapy Program in the Veterans' Administration" and "Problems in Health, Physical Education and Recreation" were held during the morning.

Chairman of the first of these two discussions was Dr. John M. Harmon, Director of Physical Education and Athletics at the University. Other speakers were Arthur G. Miller, Assistant Chief, Athletic Division, Special Services, Veterans' Administration and Chester K. Delano, Chief of the Athletic Division, Special Services, Veterans' Administration.

Stamp Fund

We are all familiar with the fine projects that the Boston University Women's Council has sponsored and supported for many years. The record of brilliant achievements in the past stands as a glowing tribute to the splendid leaders and collaborators who have given and still give of themselves so unstintingly. The Past is the inspiration of the Present. The Present must worthily reflect that inspiration to build for the Future.

The Special Projects Committee is happy to announce the initiation of a STAMP FUND to help the Council maintain its many interests in the University. The STAMP will be in the University colors of scarlet and white — your seal of good will to use on your stationery and envelopes.

In order to launch successfully this STAMP FUND, we earnestly solicit your cooperation. Please buy the stamps and use them to spread the name and fame of Boston University. Kindly use the blank below to order more stamps. Let's rally 'round and put it over!

News of the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals

The plans for the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals for the coming year include trying to do something about our shortage of beds for private cases and attempting to acquire more nursing service for our patients.

The Private Pavilion at 41 Morton Street, Jamaica Plain, the old Forest Hills General Hospital, was acquired by the Trustees to provide an additional 93 private patient beds. The Pavilion has been operated since it was taken over on December 2, 1946, by means of retaining as many as we could of the former personnel of the Forest Hills General Hospital and amplifying them by adding additional personnel. There are 48 beds open at present and considerable work must be done to put the Pavilion in proper condition for use for private patients.

A new main entrance will be provided and an X-ray department will be established on the first floor near the new entrance. Improvements will be made in the flooring and in the elevator and in utility rooms, sterilizing facilities, grounds, and general interior decorations. The acquisition of this property has provided a much more rapid answer to our need for an increased number of beds than the original plan for a new building would have done. In addition to the increasing space for private patients, we need an expansion in the number of ward beds for teaching purposes since the coming of Doctor Smithwick, our new Surgeon-in-Chief.

As in all hospitals, we have been very short of nurses, and we have been unable to provide the little niceties of nursing care which would make a patient's stay as happy as possible. Luckily, the Red Cross has made possible a considerable improvement in our situation by supplying us with 16 recently trained Volunteer Nurses' Aides. The Red Cross is planning to continue training and supplying us with these.

The Hospital is employing, as they become available, increased numbers of ward helpers in order that the nurses' services may be used for duties which are strictly nursing. It is our hope that the present indication of an increasing interest among high school students in going into nursing schools will result in a normalized entering class for September.

IN MEMORIAM

It is with deep regret that the Class of 1896 announces the death of its member, ETHELWYN A. REA, in Malden February 24, 1947. It will come as a shock, especially to her classmates who visited with her at our Fiftieth Reunion in May of last year and remember her quiet, friendly greetings and interest in everyone. At that time she had just recovered from an illness which she had feared would make it impossible for her to attend. She made light of it and was happy when she found she could join us. Not only did she look forward to the event, but she expressed the hope that the attendance would be better than it had been five years before. It would almost seem that she felt it might be the last reunion she was to attend.

After graduation from Boston University Ethelwyn taught for three years in a small college in Greenville, Tennessee. Returning to Massachusetts she taught in several high schools, among them Stockbridge, Plymouth, Wakefield and Quincy, completing her teaching career of about fifteen years.

In 1916 she became instructor in the Division of University Extension just created by the State of Massachusetts and was associated there till the time of her retirement. Her duties required the correction of papers in Latin, Botany and Biology and the checking of papers from outside instructors as well as the making of weekly and monthly reports for the Department Head. In addition she did considerable proof reading, prepared courses in Latin and Psychology, and did some work on a course in Ancient History.

She always expressed great interest in the work but stressed the work itself rather than her part in it. In fact her whole life was useful without any display and could not be fully appreciated except by those who were closely associated with her. In a letter of appreciation her former associates spoke with affection of her and expressed their admiration of her ability and conscientious regard for duty.

Ethelwyn’s interests outside her work were connected with her church where she taught girls in Sunday School for years. In recent times President, Secretary and Treasurer of the Woman’s Auxiliary.

A sister, with whom she lived, and two brothers survive.

In her passing Boston University has lost a graduate who showed her loyalty not only by her presence at University functions whenever possible but by her response to her Alma Mater’s needs.

Announcement has been made of the retirement of WALTER R. AMESBURY, CBA, as treasurer of Lasell Junior College, effective in June. An administrator of the Waltham Hospital, he was an instructor at Lasell from 1909 to 1919 and became treasurer in 1923. Mr. Amesbury lives at 19 Berkeley Place, Auburn.

ARLIN T. DOANE, CBA, has been appointed Assistant Manager of the Shell Oil Company’s Retail Marketing Department in New York. A veteran of the First World War, he consecutively worked as a salesman for a yeast corporation, owned his own distributing business, and sold his business prior to beginning a career with Shell Oil Company in 1931 as a lubricating salesman. Thereafter, he progressed through various positions, serving as Sales Manager and Acting Manager of the Boston division. While on military leave of absence during the recent war, Mr. Doane served as a lieutenant commander with the Navy where he was responsible for the procurement of aviation gasoline and gasoline components.

JULIAN E. LAKEY, CLA, Grad’22, is a service engineer with the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company in Washington, D.C., where his home address is 1659 Myrtle Street. Mr. Lakey is also a member of the Alexander Graham Bell Chapter No. 15 of the Telephone Pioneers of America which is composed of telephone employees with over twenty-one years of service.

Among recent mail at the Alumni Office were two greeting cards from Ellen and EARLE RUGG, one mailed in 1945 and the other posted in 1946. Their letter tells of Mr. and Mrs. Rugg's work at the Christian Institute, in the Lahore and Multan Districts, Panjab, India. The brief message of the 1946 card said that Mr. and Mrs. Rugg's furlough to the United States would start in May. Their address after June 1, 1947, will be c/o the Division of Foreign Missions, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dr. EDWIN PRINCE BOOTH, Grad, '29, who is now on a year's Sabbatical leave from the School of Theology, spending that leave in Europe, recently visited the grave of his son, Bray, who was killed in the invasion of Germany on March 24 in an advance Paratroop penetration of the Ruhr. Doctor Booth visited his son's grave in Holland and wrote a piece about this visit which was syndicated by the New York Herald Tribune to several American newspapers. It appeared on the front page of the Boston Globe in a featured double column position and is now being frequently copied and quoted all over the nation because it took the stand that the boys who are buried in Europe should be allowed by their American relatives to remain where they are. It was a tender, beautiful, and comforting article describing the more than 27,000 well-tended graves in one Dutch cemetery.

The Reverend F. MARION SMITH, in addition to being pastor at Central Avenue Methodist Church in Indianapolis, Indiana, is "teaching a class in general psychology at Butler University each morning at eight with over one hundred and fifty students enrolled."

HAROLD W. RUOPP, Theol, '40, has resigned his post as minister of the Central Church of Chicago effective August 31, 1947. It is his present plan to spend a period of time in speaking on college campuses and in lecturing to ministers' conferences. After this he hopes to return to the type of ministry for which he considers himself best fitted — being pastor of some church where he will have the opportunity of ministering to college students and other young people. Dr. Ruopp is an alumnus of Carnegie Institute of Technology and Ohio Wesleyan University, as well as the University of Berlin and Oxford University as Jacob Sleeper Fellow from the University's School of Theology.

Dr. WILSON G. COLE has been pastor of The University Methodist Church in Syracuse, New York, for twelve years. He was the successor to Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, also a graduate of the School of Theology. At the conclusion of his twelve years of ministry, a banquet was given in his honor in the Syracuse Hotel, attended by the Mayor of the city, representatives of the Jewish Church, the Catholic Church, and every civic organization in the city. A gold plaque and a large purse in recognition of his service to the church, Syracuse University, and the city was presented to him.

Dr. JOHN MILLS, pastor of the Hope Congregational Church in Springfield, Massachusetts, in addition to carrying on a most successful pastorate in a great American city, has found time to write two best-selling books. He is TAKING A LOOK AT YOURSELF, and WHY WE ACT THAT WAY. Both books have had a large sale in England as well as in this nation.

its contribution the Rockville Church said:

Believing that every church in Methodism should be concerned for adequate training of its ministerial leadership, and hopeful that the present campaign for two-thirds of a million dollars being carried on by Boston University School of Theology will be a complete success, the Official Board of Saint Mark's Church, Rockville Centre, New York, in regular session last evening, March 10th, 1947, pledged itself to give at least a thousand dollars in the name of the church to your campaign. We sincerely hope that enough other churches will follow our example that you will be able, at an early date, to meet the challenge of the "Crusade for Christ," and secure funds for your badly needed new building.

The annual conferences of New England are clearing their decks for action in the Crusade Challenge Campaign during the next conference year. The New England Conference has already made official preparations for the solicitation of funds. Doctor Stewart has conferred with the cabinets of all the other New England Conferences and has met with excellent response. There are many other approaches which the director is making, but I am citing these simply as an early April report. It will be magnificently superseded by the time BOSTONIA reaches you.

Let us return to the opening thought of this article. Every alumnus knows of the primacy of spirit over matter; every alumnus knows that the Church invisible is more real than the Church visible; and yet every alumnus knows that adequate physical facilities are imperative instruments if the Kingdom of God is to be established. Boston University School of Theology needs modern instruments of education and of service.

Dr. THOMAS HENRY McCLINTOCK, of Brooklyn, New York, writes that now that he has free time he intends to travel a bit more. In the past Dr. McClintock has made several automobile tours of Europe but now plans to see a little of his own country. A few months ago he drove his youngest daughter out to Pasadena, California, where she was called on a special government mission to work at California Tech. After leaving Pasadena he drove up to Altura, thence home. March 1 was the date of Doctor and Mrs. McClintock’s departure for a trip to Mexico City and Arizona. Here’s hoping it will be a pleasant and safe trip. Dr. HOWARD STREETER, of Manchester, New Hampshire tells us that he is the proud grandfather of a fine baby girl born a few months ago. His daughter, Eileen, the baby’s mother, is married to Captain William H. Russell, of Manchester, New Jersey, who is now connected with the Insurance Company of North America. Dr. and Mrs. WESLEY T. LEE were recently laid low with the prevailing grippe but have recovered and are up once more.

Dr. Virginia T. Smith, 1888, of Long Beach, California, starts off this year’s Fund.

Dr. Smith has made a very generous gift of $500 to get the Annual Drive for 1947 under way. A member of the class of 1888, she retired from active practice in 1926, but was able to come on for her fiftieth reunion in 1938. Dr. Smith recently celebrated her 87th birthday, and says that it is through the Alumni Association that she is able to keep in touch with Medical School progress.

Dr. HARRY M. POLLOCK, JR., formerly of Westwood, Massachusetts, has moved to College Highway, Farmington, Connecticut.
Boston University clubs all over the country are receiving enthusiastic support from alumni who are eager to keep in touch with the University and to become acquainted with other Boston University people in their section. Here is news of what these clubs are doing:

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT

An informal social meeting of the Boston University Club of Bridgeport was held in March. The Bridgeport group also held a bridge party April 22 which was attended by a large number of club members. The activities of this club have received fine support from Boston University alumni in the area; meetings have been held at least once a month.

HARTFORD

The Boston University Club of Hartford held an organizing meeting on the evening of April 14, at Jewell Hall, in the Y.M.C.A. building in Hartford. Coach Aldo "Buff" Donelli was the main speaker of the evening. The University film, "Let's Go to Boston University; Thirty Minutes of University Life," was shown. Mr. Warren S. Freeman gave a short talk outlining plans for club work.

NEW HAVEN

A dinner meeting was held by the Boston University Club of New Haven on the evening of April 16, at the Garde Hotel in New Haven. President John Maitland presided at this meeting. The main speakers on the program were: Mr. Warren S. Freeman, who gave a brief report on the University, particularly the School of Law; and Miss Ruth Whittaker, Associate Editor of BOSTONIA, who spoke briefly on plans for the magazine. Entertainment, a community sing, and the showing of the Boston University film completed the program.

PORTLAND, MAINE

A dinner meeting of the Boston University Club of Portland will be held in the early part of May. Dean Elsbeth Melville, who is well-known in the Portland area, will be present and will speak to the group. Miss Gertrude Prinn presiding. Any Boston University alumni interested in joining the club may contact Miss Ellen Mathews in the Alumni Office in Boston for further details.

DENVER, COLORADO

An organizing meeting of the Boston University Club of Denver was held at the Brown Palace Hotel, the Onyx Room, on April 21. Miss Katherine Hilliker, assistant to the Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, spoke to the group on the progress of the University. Following the business meeting University films were shown. Any alumni or alumna interested in joining the Denver group should contact Miss Ellen Mathews in the Alumni Office in Boston.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

The Boston University Club of Chicago held an organizing meeting on April 25 at the Hotel Stevens in Chicago. This first meeting, held in the evening, was for the purpose of determining the amount of interest in a Boston University club in this area. Miss Katherine Hilliker, assistant to the Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, spoke to the group on the progress of the University.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

CONCORD — MANCHESTER — NASHUA

A dinner meeting of Boston University alumni in Concord, Manchester, and Nashua, New Hampshire, will be held on May 19 at the Manchester Country Club. Mr. Guy Foster, CBA'20, of Manchester, will be the master of ceremonies. President Daniel L. Marsh will be the main speaker of the evening. Mr. Warren S. Freeman, Executive Alumni Secretary, will give a short talk outlining plans for club work.

HAVERHILL, MASSACHUSETTS

The Boston University Club of Haverhill had many enthusiastic supporters at an organizing meeting held on April 2 at the Hotel Whitnert. Miss Ellen Mathews, Field Representative from the Alumni Office for clubs, outlined plans for club work. A general meeting for all alumni in the Haverhill area will be held on May 19 at which time Coach "Buff" Donelli will speak to the group on next year's football plans. Executive Alumni Secretary Warren Freeman also plans to be present. Boston University alumni interested in this club should contact Mr. Jackson Cohen, 40 Summer Street, Haverhill.

LAWRENCE

Plans for the formation of a Boston University Club of Lawrence were discussed at a meeting of alumni on March 24 at the Andover Inn, Andover. Miss Ellen Mathews from the Alumni Office outlined methods by which the club might be formed and offered the assistance of the Alumni Office in furthering the growth of the club. The Lawrence group met again on April 11 at the Y.M.C.A., Lawrence. Mr. Freeman spoke to the club on the activities of the Alumni Association and the University. A May meeting is now being planned. For further information write to Miss Ellen Mathews at the Alumni Office in Boston.

LOWELL

Boston University alumni in Lowell met to organize a club in that area on March 20 at the Page Restaurant in Lowell. Some helpful suggestions for club work were given by Miss Ellen Mathews of the Alumni Office staff. Alumni interested in this club are requested to contact Professor James Dow, Lowell Textile Institute or The Reverend Laurence Blackburn, 8 Kirk Street, Lowell.

SPRINGFIELD

The Boston University Club of Springfield held a reorganizing meeting on March 27 at the Hotel Kimball.
