Panel discussion: The future of humanitarian aid

Ochojska, Janina
Boston University Institute for Human Sciences

http://hdl.handle.net/2144/20111
JANINA OCHOJSKA is President of the Polish Humanitarian Organization (PHO) which she founded in 1994, following a trip to war-torn Bosnia with a French humanitarian convoy. PHO was the first such organization created in Eastern Europe to help victims of war, natural disasters and severe poverty in, among other places, Kazakhstan, Kosovo, Chechnya, Afghanistan and Iraq. It also runs aid programmes to help children in need in Poland. For her work, Ochojska has received several awards, including, in 1993, the European Woman of the Year title from the European Commission. She writes frequently about humanitarian issues.

LARRY COX is Senior Program Officer of the Human Rights and International Cooperation Unit at the Ford Foundation. His work focuses on international human rights issues and events, international justice, and on advancing economic, social, cultural, and human rights in the United States. Prior to his role with the Ford Foundation, Mr. Cox was for five years executive director of the Rainforest Foundation, an international organization that works with indigenous peoples in the Brazilian Amazon to protect their land and rights. He worked for Amnesty International for 14 years, holding a number of positions, including communications director, director of the Program Against the Death Penalty and deputy director of Amnesty International USA.