Dear Mr. Velloph:

We are now back in Boston, and things have settled down pretty much to normal. Bob has pretty much recovered; he can do almost everything (except pull ropes on our sailboat).

We are most eager to hear about the results relating to the four draft bills:

1. How did the learning process, and especially the critique sessions, go? Did the teams come up with acceptable draft bills and research reports?

2. What were the results of the discussions with the foreign experts? Did you decide to invite Dr. Altman for the industrial policy bill? Did the experts suggest useful background information, or specific changes in the bills?

3. What is the current status of the bills and reports?

4. What is the current status of the on-going project, and the proposed next steps?

5. What is the current status of the evaluation of the project?

We realize these constitute a lot of questions for busy people like yourself, and yet we really would like feedback; that’s how we learn how to improve the work we’re trying to do. Perhaps, if you don’t have time to answer yourself, Pom could do so.

Anyway, we do hope all goes well with you all, and look forward to hearing how things go. Our best to everyone!

As always,
Bob and Ann
