THE RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT L. H. MURLIN

At a meeting of the Trustees of Boston University on Monday, September 22, honorable release from his duties was granted President Lemuel H. Murlin, following Dr. Murlin's request that he be enabled to accept the offer of the Presidency of DePauw University, Greencastle, Indiana, tendered him by the trustees of that institution on September 6.

While expressing the deepest regret that President Murlin desired to leave Boston University, the trustees, after he had explained his wish to accept the offer of the Indiana University, of which he is an alumnus, acted favorably upon his request.

President Murlin's release is effective at his convenience. He has not as yet decided when he will terminate his duties at Boston University, but offered, if the press of work made it desirable, to remain here until the beginning of the February semester.

A committee was appointed to make nominations for Dr. Murlin's successor. Bishop Hughes was directed by the trustees to draw up resolutions of appreciation for President Murlin's services to Boston University during the past thirteen years, and to present them for the adoption of the trustees at their next meeting.

President Murlin, in discussing his request to be released, told the trustees that he regretted greatly leaving Boston University, but that he deeply desired to accept the call from his alma mater and to spend his efforts in the building up of the college from which he graduated in 1891.

In a statement issued to the trustees he said:

"The invitation is from my alma mater and amounts to a royal command. I have had suggestions of the possibility of going to other positions but I have always replied with a prompt and decided 'No,' expecting to spend the rest of my life, God permitting, and the Trustees desiring it, in Boston University. When there were some rumors at the General Methodist Episcopal Conference in May, I wrote the Trustees, saying that this was my desire and expectation; and they expressed much gratification that such was my plan. But an invitation from my alma mater is another matter. To return to my own college, to be the first alumnus ever chosen for such a position, to spend the rest of my life in the service of alma mater, is a most alluring opportunity.

"It is clearly understood that in going to DePauw I am free from financial anxieties and am to devote myself to the students, faculty, alumni and the public generally in creating goodwill, loyalty, and in promoting college education. An inviting task! This does not mean that DePauw doesn't need more money. 'It's a poor college that isn't poor'; but for the next few years the chief emphasis is as I have indicated. Nor does it mean that there are no anxieties nor burdens for a president of DePauw. There has always been quite enough to do. But I so thoroughly believe in the American college as an important vital factor in our national educational life that I rather welcome this opportunity of giving to the American college, through my alma mater, the last and best, though not so exacting, of my life's labors.

"Let me express my profound appreciation of your confidence and esteem. That I have had them so completely and constantly has been a supreme satisfaction, but also a most solemn responsibility. I esteem you too highly, and am altogether too much bound up in the possibilities of Boston University, to reach this conclusion without some trial. We love Boston as the most desirable city in the world in which to live; New England is very dear to us. We have had most sweet and cordial relations not only within the circle of the Boston University official family, but in various activities in the city. The numerous letters we have received from those outside of the Boston University circle, as well as from those within, have surprised us by their number, sincerity and depth of feeling. Our only compensating comfort lies in the fact that our invitation to DePauw is hearty, unanimous and enthusiastic, and gives us the opportunity of spending our last years of service among old-time friends where we began our life work. From all quarters of the state and from all classes of people, we are receiving letters of genuine welcome and hearty promise from tried and true friends, of enthusiastic cooperation."

President Murlin's announcement of his desire to accept the post at DePauw comes within a month of the day on which he assumed the presidency of Boston University, thirteen years ago. His inaugural address was presented on October 20, 1911, in Trinity Church.

The announcement of Dr. Murlin's intention to leave Boston University met with expressions of sincere regret on all sides from his associates and the student body.

President Murlin's decision was arrived at only after long consideration, he said. The appeal of his alma mater to him to assume the direction of its affairs constituted a plea which he felt he should act upon favorably.

Several months ago, when he was first consulted concerning the post, the Boston University executive declared that he could not think of leaving his duties here. DePauw representatives requested him, however, to give the matter serious consideration, inasmuch as they felt certain that he was the man they wanted for the position.

Although there were one hundred names before the committee delegated to seek a president, Dr. Murlin was informed that he was the unanimous choice. While still feeling that his duty lay with Boston University, he was asked to visit Greencastle, Ind., where he had been graduated from DePauw in 1891, and decided that it was only fair to his alma mater to do this. Early in June he made the trip, and studied the needs of the university there, returning with a feeling of increased interest in the proposal to take over the leadership of DePauw. Nevertheless, he continued to devote much serious thought to the matter before arriving at a decision.

PRESIDENT MURLIN'S ADMINISTRATION

President Lemuel H. Murlin came to Boston University in 1911, delivering his inaugural address in Trinity Church in October of that year. He had been called from Baker University in Kansas, of which institution he had been president from 1894 until 1911. He was born November 16, 1861, in Mercer County, Ohio, and was graduated from DePauw University in 1891 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He received the degree of Bachelor of Sacred Theology in 1892, the D.D. degree shortly thereafter, and studied for some time in various universities in Europe. Four institutions, including Harvard in 1921, have awarded him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws in recognition of his services to education in New England.

He has been President of the New England Association of Colleges; is a member of numerous clubs and the Chamber of Commerce of this city, and of the Authors' Club in London. Mrs. Murlin was before her marriage Ermina Fallass, a professor in Cornell College, Iowa. They were married in 1893.

Thirteen years ago this month President Murlin's inaugural address, "The University and the City," attracted much attention in American educational circles. The idea had been in the minds of American educators for several years, but never was it so clearly stated as on this occasion. After briefly outlining the four important steps in the development of democratic education, President Murlin said:

"The problem of our civilization is the problem of the city; it would seem, therefore, that if the University is to be a significant factor in our civilization, it must continue in the future, as in the past, to live in the midst of the life which it serves; it follows, therefore, that the next advance in educational development will be the founding of the Municipal University. The future historian will declare that the rise of the Municipal University in the twentieth century was . . . perhaps the greatest epoch in the educational history of the world."

The address met instant response from the people of the city; all the Boston newspapers printed it in full and commented favorably upon it in their editorial columns.

Under Dr. Murlin's administration Boston University won the esteem once expressed by Chairman Richard J. Lane of the Boston School Committee, who said at a hearing on the subject of a State University for Massachusetts:

"Take the example of Boston University as an example of what a university can do in the way of co-operation. It has got the modern idea of education and is reaching out and attempting to give opportunities which some other colleges do not seem willing to give."

That this progress has been appreciated also by President Murlin's colleagues is indicated by the following extract from a letter from President Faunce of Brown University:

"I wonder if you realize how all your colleagues in New England admire what you have accomplished. . . Through you Boston University has found a sphere unoccupied by any other—a sphere of utmost importance and value to America—and has entered into that sphere cheerfully, determinedly and exuberantly. We are all delighted. All your brethren speak of you with warmest regard and genuine affection."

"In the heart of the city—in the service of the city," was the motto which President Murlin chose to represent the spirit and purpose of the University.

The sound wisdom of this policy has been proven by the course of events during the past decade. When Dr. Murlin came to Boston University in 1911 the enrolment was 1,347; last year it was 10,515. But these latter figures do not include all the persons whom the university life is touching. In addition to the students listed on the rolls, more than 2,000 men and women are yearly taking advantage of the extra-mural opportunities which Boston University offers.

From the beginning of his administration President Murlin devoted close attention to the business side of the University. It is significant that while the annual income in 1911 was $200,000, last year it was $1,294,276.

In 1911 Dr. Murlin found five departments in Boston University: College of Liberal Arts, School of Theology, School of Law, School of Medicine and Graduate School. Since then there have been added the College of Business Administration in 1913, Summer Session in 1915, School of Education in 1918, School of Religious Education in 1918, College of Practical Arts and Letters in 1919, and the Art Department of the School of Education in 1919.

One of the most significant features of Dr. Murlin's administration is the linking of the university program with the educational system of Boston and New England. The university has also become closely united with the business life of Boston.

The appreciation of the part Boston University has played under Dr. Murlin's administration is not limited to Boston. The university has gained recognition throughout the entire country. Last year more than twenty universities sent to Boston University for men and women to fill positions on their faculties.

A tribute was paid to Dr. Murlin's success in his chosen field when Harvard granted him the honorary degree of LL.D. In conferring the degree, President Lowell referred to Dr. Murlin as "President of Boston University, with the wisdom to perceive the service that could be rendered by a university in a large city and the capacity to make his vision true."

UNIVERSITY NOTES

Mrs. Lucy Jenkins Franklin has been elected Dean of Women in Boston University. For several years she has been Dean of Women in Evansville College, Indiana. Dean Franklin has already arrived in Boston; she will officially assume her duties at the University following the annual meeting of the Trustees in November. Dean Franklin is a trustee of Ohio Wesleyan University, of which institution she is a graduate with the degrees A.B. and A.M. She has done graduate work at Radcliffe College, the University of Chicago and Columbia University. Her teaching experience has included, beside her work at Evansville College, work in the School of Oratory of Ohio Wesleyan University.

The net number of students in the Summer Session was 1,058, as compared with 992 in the previous year. Of the 1,058, 223 were enrolled in the College of Business Administration and 309 were Boston University students who continued their college work through the summer. The number of instructors was 74, as compared with 65 in 1923. 40 states and 13 foreign countries were represented in the registration.

The School of Education is now located at 675 Boylston Street, directly opposite the College of Liberal Arts. In the same building are the Department of Music, the Publicity staff, the Alumni Bureau, and the Campaign workers.

The Departments

GRADUATE SCHOOL

The enrolment in the Graduate School for the present academic year is far in advance of that of any previous year. On October 1, 1923, the registration was 272; on October 1, 1924, it was 342. The enrolment during the past Summer Session also showed a great increase in graduate students over that of any previous year. The total number of students taking graduate courses in the Summer Session in 1923 was 57, and in 1924, 108. These large enrolments are particularly significant when we consider that the requirements for the degrees in the Graduate School are much greater than they were a decade ago, and, we believe, no higher requirements are made in any university in the country.

Professor Walter M. Horton, of Union Theological Seminary, in a review of certain books in The Journal of Philosophy, after referring to the fact that some writers such as G. Stanley Hall and Berguer, fail to discriminate between the Gospel of John and the Synoptics, says:

"There is one psychological study of the life of Jesus, however, which has the courage to do this: The Psychic Health of Jesus, by Professor W. E. Bundy, Macmillan, 1922 (see esp. pp. 128-36). In this and many other respects I consider it the superior of both Hall and Berguer. It is the most critical and scientific study of the life of Jesus yet issued, although the author is not a professional psychologist."

Professor Bundy received his Ph.D. from the Graduate School of Boston University in 1921, and the book referred to represents his dissertation for the Doctorate.

Weather conditions prevented the complete carrying out of these plans, but class members enjoyed the informal reunion at the Epsilon Banquet Saturday night, when Professor Samuel M. ### COLLEGE OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

The dedication of the war memorial to College of Business Administration students who lost their lives in the World War took place at the opening assembly of the college on Monday, September 22. Dean Lord made the introductory remarks and read the scripture, followed by the address of Major Paul W. Baade, U. S. A., for four years commandant of the R. O. T. C., and who had so large a share in planning for the memorial. Brigadier-General Malvern Hill Barnum also gave an address. Miss Wanda H. Blinstrub, who collected the largest amount of money, gave the presentation address, which was formally acknowledged by Assistant Dean Roy Davis. The memorial erected in the main study bears an inscription and the names of the fourteen students and alumni of the College of Business Administration who paid the supreme sacrifice in the war.

The College is offering a new Saturday program of basic courses in business administration from 2 to 4 in the afternoon for the benefit of business men and women who have Saturday afternoons free and who for various reasons cannot attend evening classes. These courses are under the direction of Professor Atlee L. Percy, Director of Saturday Courses at the College of Business Administration.

Dean Lord announces the appointment of the following students to the Dean's Cabinet for the first term of the college year, 1924-25: Alvah B. Wheeler, '25, of Waltham; Lewis A. Maker, '26, of Taunton; Stanley Hirtle, '26, of Malden; Marie Barry, '26, of Salem, and Lee G. W. Nickerson, '27, of East Waterboro, Me.

Professor Leo D. O'Neil, head of the Department of Foreign Trade, has been made chairman of the evening division faculty committee, with general supervision of the evening division of the college.

Professor Charles E. Bellatty has been appointed head of the Vocational Department. Professor Bellatty retains his position as head of the Advertising Department.

SCHOOL OF LAW

The first assembly of the students of the School of Law for the present year was held in the auditorium of the Isaac Rich Hall on Monday, September 22. Dean Albers, in his address spoke in part as follows:

"The foundations of happiness and of security for individuals as well as for communities and nations may be reduced to three principles, service to others, self-restraint, and work. It is the business of the law school to teach law and justice, but the world demands more, and the only sequence is that a higher standard of honor is properly demanded of lawyers than of any other persons. I do not belittle any other profession, but the demands on the lawyer are so great that they can not be too strongly emphasized.

"It is only the wild man that goes after what he wants regardless of others. Justice demands that every right of every other person must not only be recognized but also respected. The constitution of the United States was adopted only to prevent possible despotism. The danger of despotism in a democracy is in the failure of the majority to exercise self-restraint. Much of our constitution is merely guarding the rights of the minority.

"When you get out into public life see that you contribute your full share of effort to guard against the encroachment of majorities upon the rights of minorities."

A comprehensive group of law courses for the police officers of all cities and towns in Greater Boston has been announced by the School of Law. ## SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

Comparing semester dates of this year and last, registration of the School of Education of full-time students is twenty-five per cent. increased and the enrolment of part-time students is more than thirty-five per cent. increased. The latter is peculiarly gratifying, considering the increasing competition of the normal schools that give four-year courses for degrees.

One of the notable events of the year in the School of Education is the growth of interest in the degree of Master of Education. A number of students are registered for full-time work for this degree to be gained in June or August, 1925.

Mr. Davis has had extended experience in the whole field of secondary education and has lectured at various universities and before educational associations throughout the country on topics of secondary education. high schools, and advising in their administration and planning state curricula. Mr. Davis is chairman of a committee of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools on a revision of the entrance requirements of the colleges.

Mr. Herbert Blair is appointed associate professor of School Administration. Mr. Blair's experience covers high school and normal school teaching, superintendencies in Hibbing, Minnesota, and Schenectady, N. Y., and more recently, varied activities in vocational education. Under the Federal Board of Vocational Education he supervised the trade instruction in New York. For the past two years he has made statistical studies for the Veterans' Bureau of the results accomplished in trade training. He has visited every type of training center in each of the larger eastern and southern cities, thus obtaining a wealth of first-hand material.

The Art Department has established a new division of work in the Metal Crafts. Miss Gladys Ricker is in charge. A special development this year in the Art Department is the increase of interest in the Saturday afternoon class in Still Life Drawing and Painting and Outdoor Sketching. The class is under the instruction of Mr. Will R. Davis, and is open only to mature students.

Professor Guy M. Wilson has been invited by the school system of Melrose to assist in the elaboration of a revised curriculum for the schools. Professor Wilson is also chairman of the National Education Association Committee on the revision of the subject matter of Arithmetic.

SCHOOL OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION AND SOCIAL SERVICE

The School of Religious Education and Social Service has opened its eighth year in its fourth home, located at 20 Beacon Street, in the Clafin Building. This building occupies the site of the first home of the Boston University College of Liberal Arts. The better library, classroom and office facilities thus provided are greatly needed to meet the needs of the largest student body ever enrolled in this School.

The faculty has been greatly strengthened by the addition of several new members. Among the additions are Professor John C. S. Andrew, History and Government; Professor Charles W. Helsley, Educational Psychology and High School Methodology; and Professor Neilson C. Hannay, English.

The Annual Service of Consecration, held on September 28, was attended by a large number of faculty members and students. Dr. C. O. Ford of Springfield, gave the address.

The contribution of the School of Religious Education to the scientific construction of church and religious education buildings was featured during National Fire Prevention Week, October 5 to 12. The startling announcement was made by the Fire Underwriters Association that five church buildings are burned every day in the year, with a total loss of more than six million dollars. High tribute was paid in the public press of the Nation to the scientific investigations which the School of Religious Education and Social Service has made towards the reduction of the loss of property and life from church fires.
